Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a printing device, a control method for the printing device, and a storage medium. 2. Description of the Related Art A multifunction device provided with an ink jet printer, a copy machine, and the like (referred to as a multi-function device hereinafter) has become widespread in recent years. In the multifunction device, a printing device performs printing using a print head. The printing device includes a serial communication unit for serial communication with an external device, and a parallel communication unit for parallel communication with an external device. The parallel communication unit transmits and receives data to and from a host device such as a computer. The serial communication unit serializes and deserializes data to and from an external device through the parallel communication unit. The communication units are connected to a main control board. The main control board controls the printing device. The main control board executes a process of printing by controlling the print head, etc., and transmits print data to the parallel communication unit. The main control board controls the communication units. Therefore, when the main control board has an abnormality, the control of the print head, the communication units, etc. cannot be performed. When the communication units are configured by a general semiconductor integrated circuit, it is relatively easy to modify a circuit in the semiconductor integrated circuit. However, when the communication units are configured by an FPGA, a circuit cannot be modified because the communication units are built in the FPGA. A product cost of a main control board is higher than that of a semiconductor integrated circuit used as a single-function circuit. Therefore, the main control board is configured by, e.g., an 2d92ce491b
