Max Verstappen must be on track in his first test with Renault this week, after a report suggested the team was asking him to keep up a constant pace at the Barcelona test. The Dutchman has been linked with a switch to Red Bull for 2020, though the team has not confirmed if it will confirm plans to bring him back to the fold. Asked on Dutch television if he had to do so much work in the first day of testing, Verstappen replied: "Of course." "We gave them [the drivers] a present," he added. "A helmet. So they don't have to bother us now. But the guys have to have their head on a ball." So they don't have to bother us now. But the guys have to have their head on a ball." Verstappen's team-mate Daniel Ricciardo denied the claim in an interview with Australian media, saying "no, no, no" to the suggestion he was being asked to race pace. In other news, Renault has called on Renault Sport F1 director Cyril Abiteboul to step down as the team searches for a replacement. Abiteboul, who joined Renault in 2017, was the subject of criticism following the news that there will be no driver headlining the team's 2020 line-up. "Cyril is an exceptional talent," said Renault team boss Cyril Abiteboul. "He is absolutely in our DNA. We cannot replace him but we have to do our best to find a suitable replacement." The F1 team has faced a wave of criticism after rejecting a number of talent and experience of potential drivers. 2d92ce491b
