It's been a busy, hectic, and stressful time for the moms of the family as they work to get their daughter, Maya, ready for her third year of middle school. Lots of getting ready for the new school year (transition) and ending the year (successful transition). For the most part, she's taken to the new school like a fish to water. She's still running a bit behind in getting up and going to bed, but for the most part, she's been taking to school like a pro. She's made friends and being part of a group of girls. She's been part of a theater production, a swim team, and a volleyball team. She has made many new friends through her new school. She seems to have friends everywhere. Her teacher seems to really enjoy her. She loves her social life. We've also had a big transition around this house. Daddy lost his job. We've had to change our mortgage plan. That's stressful. And I don't have a job. Oh, boy! So, what does that mean? We're now living at my parents' house. We're down to the bare essentials. The only one who is really going to miss it are my mom and my sister. I miss having people to talk to and say hi to when I walk down the street. My mom doesn't have that anymore. It's been fun playing house with my sister and mom. We've had a lot of girl time!Effects of feeding level, sex, weight gain, and fasting on adipose tissue lipoprotein lipase activity and serum lipids in prepubertal lambs. Fourteen male and 14 female prepubertal lambs were individually fed a milk replacer at four different energy levels (2.8, 3.4, 3.9, and 4.3 times the maintenance requirement for maintenance). Five feedings were equal to the maintenance requirement and four were approximately 6% below the maintenance requirement.
